Wall down a third cabinet minister

No re-election bid. Advanced Education Minister Rob Norris leaving politics for other career options

Premier Brad Wall is losing a third member of his cabinet.

Advanced Education Minister Rob Norris says he won't run again in the next provincial election.

"You know it was and remains a very, very difficult decision," Norris said on Wednesday at the legislature.

"It's a natural time, as many of my colleagues are gearing up and undertaking preparations for the next election. That's a big commitment and it was an opportunity for us to think about career options and opportunities into the future."

Norris's announcement comes after Finance Minister Ken Krawetz and Social Services Minister June Draude — both founding members of the Saskatchewan Party — said they won't seek re-election when voters head to the polls in 2016.

His exit means Wall could have big shoes to fill in a cabinet shuffle later this spring.

"Certainly Rob would have been a candidate for some of these other duties, absolutely," Wall said, "and that gets a little more difficult now."

Before entering politics, Norris was the co-ordinator of global relations at the University of Saskatchewan. His future, he said, will likely be "on the nexus, right on the cusp between industry and academia."

Norris was elected in the constituency of Saskatoon Greystone in 2007 by only 300 votes, and was re-elected in 2011.

He was the labour minister in 2007 when controversial essential services legislation was introduced.

In his first stint as advanced education minister in 2010, Norris cut provincial funding to First Nations University of Canada because of issues with the way the school was managed and allegations of financial irregularities.

He also held the post of immigration minister, where he faced discord from families after changes to Saskatchewan's Immigrant Nominee Program in 2012.

Norris was dropped from cabinet in May 2012 before returning to the post of advanced education minister last September.

He's learned the importance of "more communication, more engagement with stakeholders," he said, "and certainly as I returned to cabinet, I've attempted to do that."

David Woods trial

Jurors taken on route that led to woman's body

Jurors in the trial of a Saskatoon man accused of killing his wife have been taken on the route that led police to the woman's body.

David Woods is charged with first-degree murder in the death of Dorothy Woods.

It took about 45 minutes for a police-led convoy to drive out to the Blackstrap Lake area south of Saskatoon.

The judge told jurors the drive could be useful in helping them understand evidence presented at the trial.

Dorothy Woods disappeared on Nov. 11, 2011, and was found in a culvert almost two months later.

Saskatchewan's chief forensic pathologist testified on Tuesday that she died before she was dumped in the culvert. Dr. Shaun Ladham said she was possibly knocked unconscious before she was strangled with a rope.

The trial has been told the couple's marriage was on the rocks, that Dorothy had engaged in an affair and that she had told her husband she was leaving him.

Lovestruck inmates lose court appeal

Saskatchewan's high court has dismissed an appeal by two prison inmates who want to live together as a couple.

Jean Richer and Leslie Sinobert had argued that the Correctional Service of Canada is violating their rights.

The two men say they are in a relationship and want to live in the same house at the minimum-security annex at Saskatchewan Penitentiary in Prince Albert.

Prison officials denied their request, ruling that Sinobert needs to be in a separate home for inmates with mental-health issues.

Young women charged in collision that killed teens

Third victim injured.
Pair of 'senseless and preventable' deaths hits community hard

MORGAN MODJESKI

City police have charged two young women in a collision that killed two teenagers and sent a third to hospital.

Cheyann Chrystal Peeteetuce, 21, appeared in provincial court in Saskatoon on Wednesday and is facing 14 charges including impaired driving causing death.

A 17-year-old, who can't be named due to her age, faces three charges including possession of stolen property.

The crash occurred about 8 p.m. on Monday when a stolen pickup truck fled from police.

After travelling two blocks, the truck ran a stop sign at Avenue M South and 22nd Street West and struck two vehicles, pinning one against a building.

Two 17-year-olds, a boy and a girl, were pronounced dead at the scene, while a 16-year-old girl went to hospital with serious injuries. All three attended Bethlehem Catholic High School.

Greg Chatlain, director of education with Greater Saskatoon Catholic Schools, said counsellors have been sent to a school, which he didn't name at the request of parents.

He said the entire division is in mourning.

"We have 44 schools and 16,500 students, but it's remarkably close-knit," Chatlain said.

Local residents say they too were affected.

"It really hits home," said resident Victor Sass. "It could have been my granddaughter or son."

Dr. Scott Harder, owner of Harder's Family Wellness Centre, the building struck and damaged in the incident, called the deaths a tragic loss.

"It was just so senseless and preventable," Harder said.

Both women will be back in court on Thursday.

Flowers and cards expressing condolences for two teenagers killed in the crash sit the site of the collision near Avenue M and 22nd Street W. on Wednesday. MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

Abortion opponents not welcome to run for Liberals: Trudeau

Politics. Party leader insists future candidates will be expected to 'vote pro-choice' on any bills

Justin Trudeau speaks in the House of Commons in Ottawa Wednesday. CHRIS YOUNG/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Justin Trudeau says opponents of abortion need not apply to run for the Liberal party in the next election, and if they do, the Liberal leader says they'll be weeded out during the vetting process for nomination applications.

"As a party, we are steadfast in our belief … that it is not for any government to legislate what a woman chooses to do with her body, and that is the bottom line there," Trudeau said Wednesday.

"I have made it clear that future candidates need to be completely understanding that they will be expected to vote pro-choice on any bills."

Exceptions will be made, however, for incumbent opponents of abortion who became MPs before the party officially adopted a pro-choice stance, such as Toronto MPs John McKay and Judy Sgro.

Their beliefs will be "respected to a certain extent," Trudeau said, "but our position as a party is we do not reopen that debate."

Trudeau revealed the party's new hard line on abortion one day before the annual "March for Life," in which thousands of abortion opponents are expected to descend on Parliament Hill.

Trudeau said the evolution of the party position was cemented last year when Liberals "chose a resolutely pro-choice leader with over 80 per cent of the support of membership."

'Ferocious talent' Farley Mowat dead at 92

Farley Mowat was fondly remembered Wednesday for captivating generations of schoolchildren with books such as Owls in the Family and Never Cry Wolf, and for his legacy as a defender of the environment who "spoke for whales and seabirds, for tadpoles and mosses."

"He was possessed of a ferocious talent, able to write stories that provoked laughter, tears and action," Green Party Leader Elizabeth May added in a statement after news broke of Mowat's death at age 92. "We owe him more than I can say."

Mowat died Tuesday night in his hometown of Port Hope, Ont., his assistant Mary Shaw-Rimmington said.

The author was an "absolutely delightful person" who had "strong opinions that he would fight for to the death if he had to," said friend Stephen Smith.

"A highly, highly principled man, extremely generous with his time and his wealth. Just a gem, a diamond in the rough," he added. "I think we all felt that it was a real, real privilege to have them as friends, and they were truly good friends."

There was no word on a cause of death, but Smith said a statement would be issued by the family.

"He hadn't been very well, it had been a tough winter, but everybody had a tough winter in southern Ontario," he said. "But it had been particularly tough for him. He wasn't very well. He was quite old. He had various issues, as people in their 90s usually do."

From the time he was 13, Mowat was fiercely dedicated to writing about the natural world. As a young teen he started a magazine called Nature Lore and had a column in the Saskatoon Star Phoenix.

He went on to write some 40 books, many based on his own adventures and travels. He said he was lucky to be able to combine his two passions: writing and nature, calling it "the only subject I really want to write about."

"The literary legacy is enormous," said Smith.

Throughout his life, Mowat was adamant that humans learn to live in harmony with the natural world.

"It's a matter of survival," he told The Canadian Press in a 2006 interview. "Either we learn to do this, or we cease to exist. We have no God-given right to survive forever. We have screwed up so badly in so many ways so obviously that only utterly stupid species would consider that we have much of a future, as things stand."

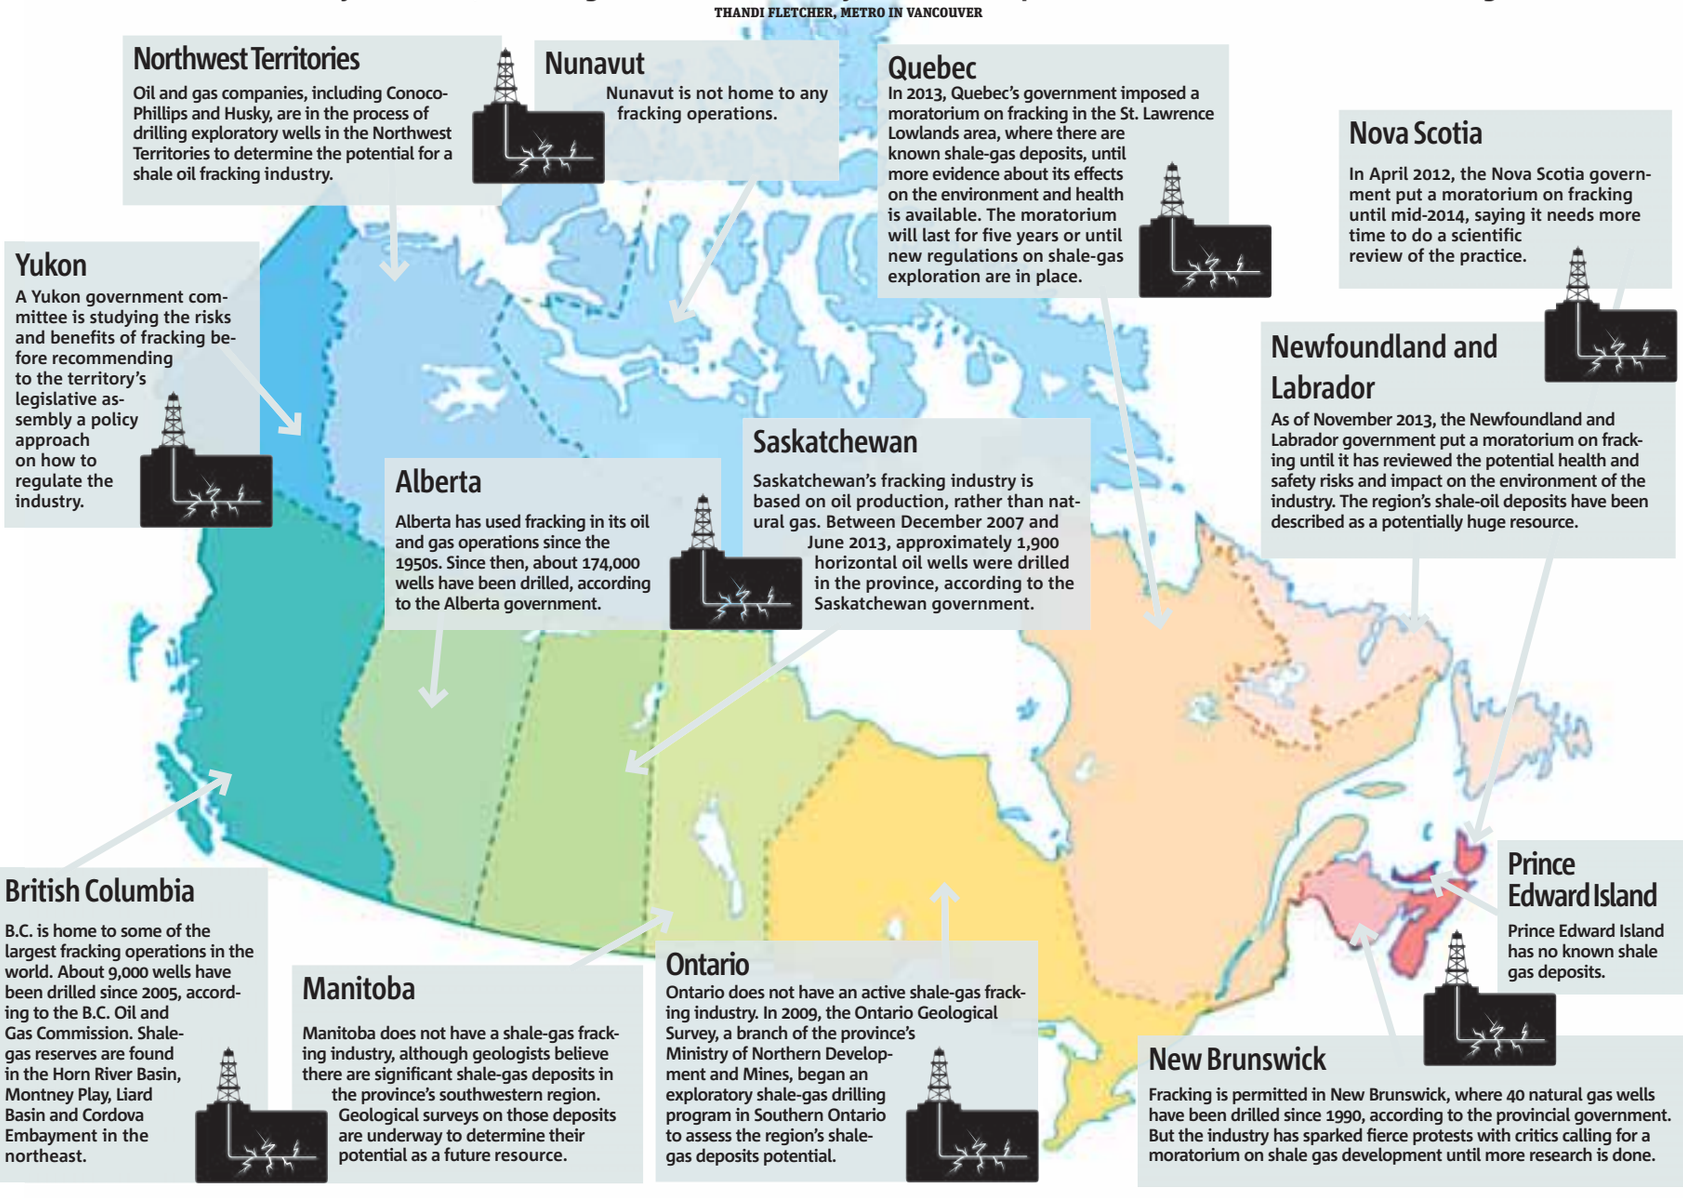
Tracking Canadian fracking

Metro's look at the controversial practice of fracking continues with Day 2 of our three-day feature. While it's booming in B.C., other provinces have been more cautious, imposing moratoriums until there's more evidence on its health-and-safety effects. Many countries, including France and Germany, have also imposed bans or moratoriums on fracking.

THANDI FLETCHER, METRO IN VANCOUVER



Northwest Territories
Oil and gas companies, including ConocoPhillips and Husky, are in the process of drilling exploratory wells in the Northwest Territories to determine the potential for a shale oil fracking industry.

Nunavut
Nunavut is not home to any fracking operations.

Quebec
In 2013, Quebec's government imposed a moratorium on fracking in the St. Lawrence Lowlands area, where there are known shale-gas deposits, until more evidence about its effects on the environment and health is available. The moratorium will last for five years or until new regulations on shale-gas exploration are in place.

Nova Scotia
In April 2012, the Nova Scotia government put a moratorium on fracking until mid-2014, saying it needs more time to do a scientific review of the practice.

Yukon
A Yukon government committee is studying the risks and benefits of fracking before recommending to the territory's legislative assembly a policy approach on how to regulate the industry.

Newfoundland and Labrador
As of November 2013, the Newfoundland and Labrador government put a moratorium on fracking until it has reviewed the potential health and safety risks and impact on the environment of the industry. The region's shale-oil deposits have been described as a potentially huge resource.

Alberta
Alberta has used fracking in its oil and gas operations since the 1950s. Since then, about 174,000 wells have been drilled, according to the Alberta government.

Saskatchewan
Saskatchewan's fracking industry is based on oil production, rather than natural gas. Between December 2007 and June 2013, approximately 1,900 horizontal oil wells were drilled in the province, according to the Saskatchewan government.

British Columbia
B.C. is home to some of the largest fracking operations in the world. About 9,000 wells have been drilled since 2005, according to the B.C. Oil and Gas Commission. Shale-gas reserves are found in the Horn River Basin, Montney Play, Liard Basin and Cordova Embayment in the northeast.

Manitoba
Manitoba does not have a shale-gas fracking industry, although geologists believe there are significant shale-gas deposits in the province's southwestern region. Geological surveys on those deposits are underway to determine their potential as a future resource.

Ontario
Ontario does not have an active shale-gas fracking industry. In 2009, the Ontario Geological Survey, a branch of the province's Ministry of Northern Development and Mines, began an exploratory shale-gas drilling program in Southern Ontario to assess the region's shale-gas deposits potential.

Prince Edward Island
Prince Edward Island has no known shale gas deposits.

New Brunswick
Fracking is permitted in New Brunswick, where 40 natural gas wells have been drilled since 1990, according to the provincial government. But the industry has sparked fierce protests with critics calling for a moratorium on shale gas development until more research is done.

The industry

Concerns and safety

After nearly a decade on the inside of what was once B.C.'s largest natural gas company, Robert Falls is well aware of some people's wariness of the oil and gas industry.

"It's very much in our nature to characterize them as arrogant or uncaring or evil," he said. "If you're Joe Public and you're looking at that industry, it's huge, it's powerful, it's ... intimidating."

But, in his experience, that assessment is simply not fair. Energy companies are concerned about the environment, and the health and safety of people living near oil and gas operation sites, he said. It's in their best interests to make it a priority or they wouldn't be able to keep operating, he said.

But, Falls said, despite the industry's best efforts to reduce the risk of disaster, things can and do go wrong. He believes energy companies need to do a better job of mitigating that risk and listening to the public's concerns.

A Green Light for Safety

During his tenure in the 1990s as manager of the environment division of Westcoast Energy, now operating as Spectra, Falls said his team had the green light to do "whatever had to be done" to safeguard the health and safety of people in the communities in which they operated.

"I don't think people realize how much time, effort and money is spent on managing environmental, health and safety issues," he said.

That sentiment is echoed by industry leaders, who claim the health and safety of residents living near fracking sites is a top concern.

Andy Calitz, chief executive officer for LNG Canada, the entity behind a proposed liquefied natural gas project in the northwestern B.C. town of Kitimat, said energy companies are constantly studying fracking and its impact on water and air quality.

The environment

"Are there concerns? Yes, we are at all times sensitive to our environmental impact."

Andy Calitz, chief executive officer for LNG Canada

"Are there concerns? Yes, we are at all times very sensitive to our environmental impact," he said. "It is high on our agenda."

Geoff Morrison, manager of B.C. operations for the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, said the organization is trying to do a better job of assuring the public about the industry's practices.

"We recognize there is a broad concern about an

Fracking 101. Northern Lights College in B.C. teaches students the ins and outs of working the fields — and staying safe

EMILY JACKSON
Metro in Vancouver

Stacy Smith is the dean of a program at Northern Lights College that trains field operators and power engineers. MATT KIELTYKA/METRO

The best time to frack is in the dead of winter.

Temperatures drop to -45 C, but to drill to gas trapped in shale in Northeastern British Columbia's Montney Play, rigs must be set up when the region's swampy muskeg is frozen so they don't sink.

Some city dwellers have perceptions that natural gas is a fast way to riches. Who can blame them? With the government promising billions in royalties from extracting gas and shipping it to yet-to-be-built liquefied natural gas (LNG) plants on the coast and then to Asia.

But that simply isn't the case.

"It's not a quick buck," explains Stacy Smith, program chair of trades at the Northern Lights College, during a tour of the simulated wellsite at the Fort St. John campus. Smith is the dean of a program that trains field operators and power engineers to drill, operate and monitor wells. Safety is his top goal.

"A huge amount of time and skill goes into making sure the gas is safe to move and use for everybody — it is not a simple process."

Yet it's the process that will power B.C.'s push for LNG plants. For every billion spent on the LNG facilities, $3.86 billion will be spent upstream, according to Fort St. John, B.C., mayor Lori Ackerman.

Not much is known about the long-term effects of fracking, a technology that dates back to the 1950s but exploded in use since 2000. But concerns are mounting about chemicals seeping into groundwater, methane escaping into the air, seismic activity and flaring of sour gas.

What they learn

Natural gas is one of the cleanest burning fossil fuels, but it's tough to get to, Smith says as he walks through the facility where, annually, 48 students train.

It requires a massive amount of energy. Once a well is drilled deep enough and sealed with concrete to prevent ground water contamination, water, sand and chemicals are pumped down to horizontally fracture the land and release the shale gas.

The gas bubbles up to a wellhead with pressure monitors and an emergency shut down valve. It can be "pretty nasty" when it comes out of the ground — if it contains hydrogen sulphide, it can kill. It can't be cleaned up. Instead, it's burned off in a process known as flaring.

Students learn to remove the hydrogen sulphide and to dehumidify the gas. After these processes, the product is mostly methane and ready to sell.

Why we frack

"It's the nature of the beast, it's the only way to access the shale gas," Smith says.

Some regions, including Quebec, have banned fracking.

"They don't want to take the chance, I think, to have the contamination potentially happen," he said.

But it's riskier in places with shallow shale formations, also known as plays. B.C.'s plays are deep — between 1,700 and 4,000 metres below the surface — compared to Quebec's (500 to 3,300 metres deep), according to the National Energy Board.

There are strict regulations around sealing wells to ensure chemicals don't leak into the ground water.

"The people that are up here, they're just like me and you. They're family people, they have kids, they don't want to see their water contaminated."

What can go wrong

"It's like anything that can go wrong," Smith said, especially operations involving massive machinery with moving parts.

Sometimes it's circumstances, sometimes there's a flaw that's missed, sometimes it's human error.

Technology improves safety, he says, pointing to emergency shut down valves that close automatically or electric monitors that alert a production facility immediately if something is wrong.

"As much as it kind of runs smoothly, there's always glitches that happen all the time, so somebody has to be there to fix them," he said. "Things break."

On opportunities

There's a two-year waitlist to get into the program, where graduates can expect starting salaries of $65,000 a year plus a healthy dose of overtime.

Even though job prospects are good, a lot hinges on the expected demand from the LNG plants.

"Everybody's sort of in this holding pattern, you know, kind of waiting," he said.

industrial process people aren't familiar (with) or is new to them," he said.

"Things Do Go Awry"

Still, Falls said the industry is not perfect. During his seven years at Westcoast Energy, Falls recalls one pipeline rupture — a sour gas leak near Fort Nelson, B.C. Fortunately, it was "very small," he said, and was quickly brought under control.

But the incident still underscores the risks associated with the industry, he said. "It doesn't matter how many studies have been done or how thoroughly they have been undertaken," he said. "Things do go awry."

"It's Not Going to Go Away"

Falls encouraged residents of communities where fracking is taking place to "ask the hard questions" to companies about emergency preparedness plans. But the industry also needs to do a better job at listening to community concerns, he said.

That's more important than ever, he said, as demand for fossil energy continues to rise. Even if there were to be strong public pushback against gas development in B.C., "that wouldn't change what the world is going to do," he said.

"If we don't supply it, somebody else is going to supply. We have to get better and we have to continuously improve because it's not going away."

2 Expensive operation. Rigs

This $6-million rig uses a kelly drive to bore into the earth and get to the shale gas. It used to be operational, but companies donated it to the Northern Lights College wellsite training facility.

3 Getting it out. Jacks that pump

A pump jack helps move oil out of the ground if there's not enough pressure for it to flow naturally.

4 Fine balance. Reading wellheads

Field operators measure pressure readings on wellheads to ensure it isn't too high (could indicate a potential explosion) or too low, which means the gas won't move through the pipelines.

5 The final step. Removing the deadly stuff

Once gas comes out of the ground, it must go through a variety of buildings and pipes to remove any deadly hydrogen sulphide and to be dehumidified.

Nigeria. Extremist group kills hundreds of people

Islamic militants who have triggered international outrage over the kidnapping of more than 270 Nigerian schoolgirls opened fire on a busy marketplace, killing hundreds in a new spasm of violence in the country's northeast.

As many as 300 people were killed in the assault late Monday on the town of Gamboru Ngala on Nigeria's border with Cameroon.

The attack escalates Nigeria's growing crisis from a campaign of bombings, massacres and abductions being waged by the Boko Haram terrorist network in its campaign to impose an Islamic state in Nigeria. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pentagon spokesman Col. Steve Warren says the troops will be arriving in a few days as part of the larger U.S. assistance team to include State Department and Justice Department personnel.

'Repugnant act.'
Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird says that Canada will supply surveillance equipment to help with the search

In the messy world of competing international interests, Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird decided Wednesday that the fate of hundreds of abducted teenage girls in Nigeria would come before all else.

Baird pledged Canada's unwavering support to help free the female students abducted by Islamic extremists, a tragedy that has now gripped the world.

Canada will supply surveillance equipment to help Nigeria find the girls, even though it has long-standing concerns about the country's human rights record, the Harper government said Wednesday.

Baird made clear that any loans of Canadian military hardware to Nigeria would be accompanied by Canadian military personnel to operate it.

"We obviously would have concerns, with Nigeria, with their human rights record and many issues," he said.

Without mentioning it specifically, Baird appeared to be referencing Nigeria's law that further criminalizes homosexuality. The Same Sex Marriage Prohibition Act criminalizes homosexual clubs and organizations, and carries a maximum 14-year prison term.

That said, Canada wants to do everything it can to help rescue the hundreds of girls aged 12 to 15 who were kidnapped by an Islamic extremist group, called Boko Haram, from a school in Nigeria three weeks ago, Baird said.

"This has been a foreign policy priority for Canada. The rights of women, the rights of girls, the campaign against early marriage ... gender violence and terrorism is obviously something which is a huge concern for us," Baird explained. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

No baby boom after this bust

Birth of fear. Like the Great Depression, after the Great Recession in 2008 the birth rate fell around the world and it has yet to rise back up

The financial crisis that followed the collapse of U.S. investment bank Lehman Brothers in 2008 did more than wipe out billions in wealth and millions of jobs. It also sent birth rates tumbling around the world as couples found themselves too short of money or too fearful about their finances to have children. Six years later, birth rates haven't bounced back.

For those who fear an overcrowded planet, this is good news. For the economy, not so good.

We tend to think economic growth comes from working harder and smarter. But economists attribute up to a third of it to more people joining the workforce each year than leaving it. The result is more producing, earning and spending.

Now this secret fuel of the economy, rarely missing and little noticed, is running out.

THE MOTHER OF ALL HOLIDAYS

HE SAYS

John Mazerolle

Mother's Day was always a special event in my parents' household, because it meant I was attempting to be an adult on a scale I've never quite recaptured in my adulthood.

Back then I bought flowers, wrote my own cards, and picked out gifts, including a large, framed stock photo of a rose on a keyboard that would have been an amazing gift if my mother was the manager of a Super 8.

I even — and this is why it's always been the Mother of All Holidays in my mind — tried to cook.

If I were to add up the number of times in my life where I attempted to prepare a full meal, it's likely Mother's Day would be responsible for at least five of them — so around half the meals I've ever cooked have been for Mom.

That's the kind of outstanding son I am.

Now I live in a different city and, like most adult sons, I make a point on Mother's Day of letting my mother know that I exist and that I know she exists, too.

This seems to touch her deeply.

I suppose it's better than leaving bread crumbs and runny yolk on her bed sheets.

Focusing on love instead of buying something saves Mom and I from the crass commercialization of yet another Hallmark holiday, while coincidentally saving me from the high price of a Hallmark card. Mommy dearest, indeed.

I've compiled some numbers to show the big business that Mother's Day has become.

I think you'll find the stats as surprising as I did when they occurred to me in a fever dream.

A fever dream of research.

Mother's Day By The Numbers:

1: Average number of mothers per lifetime, per person in Canada.

$23.2 billion: Amount that is expected to spent on Mother's Day this year in North America.

$23.1 billion: Amount that will go to the richest 1 per cent of mothers.

63: Percentage of U.S. mothers who will get food stamps in bed.

7.2: Average number of carnations required for a mother to believe her child loves her.

890,000: Number of pre-written cards with Mother's Day poetry rhyming love, glove, dove and above.

4: Number of pre-written cards with Mother's Day poetry rhyming love and shove.

100 per cent: Amount KFC, Taco Bell and other corporations love mothers, according to their Twitter feeds.

10,000: Number of "Awww"s about to ring out around Canada.

0: Mother's better than mine.

Syrian bear goes in for surgery

In Israel, a 19-year-old Syrian brown bear named Mango underwent surgery Wednesday to repair a herniated disc, said Sagit Horowitz, a spokeswoman for the Ramat Gan Zoological Center near Tel Aviv.

Zoologists first noticed Mango had a problem when he started to show signs of paralysis in his hind legs, said Dr. Merav Shamir, who led the surgery on the furry patient.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

They've got his back

"It started acutely," said Shamir. "He wasn't able to move his right hind limb and it progressively deteriorated over the following 48 hours to become completely paralyzed on the hind limbs."

"I'm nervous now — I'll be happier in a few hours," Shamir said before the hours-long surgery began.

"I wish him luck."

Veterinarians will know in the coming weeks whether Mango makes a full recovery.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A potential lifesaver

Such procedures aren't uncommon at the Ramat Gan Zoological Center, the premier zoo of Israel. Last year, veterinarians there used acupuncture to cure the chronic ear infection of a 14-year-old Sumatran tiger.

- Shamir said other bears with a similar disc problem have been euthanized. The surgery Mango underwent is novel for bears, though it's often performed on small dogs.

Of course, life intervened and shuffled most of the many onto other career tracks while the few stuck it out long enough to achieve the white-knuckle life.

We don't know if the younger version of photographer Blair Bunting had similar dreams, but at least he got to take to the skies in a USAF Thunderbirds F-18 for one day. And his cooler-than-ice handling of it was all captured on rather dizzying video.

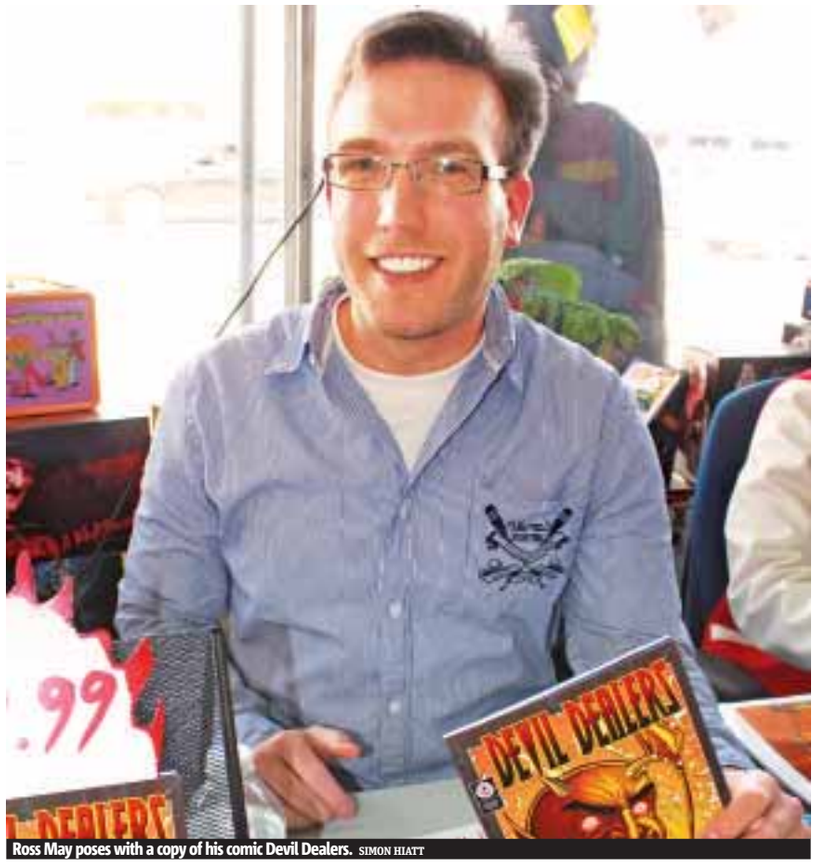
Whoosh! Bam! Pow! Local writer creates new heroes

Devil Dealers. Comic book creator Ross May, whose resumé includes Mirage Comics, breaks new ground of his own

BACKSTAGE PASS
Simon Hiatt
saskatoon@metronews.ca



Ross May poses with a copy of his comic Devil Dealers. SIMON HIATT

After a career spent bringing some of the most iconic characters in recent history to life, from Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles to Superman, Ross May has decided to create a new world of his own.

And while it may seem like he's imitating one of his own characters, a world-class card player, he says he doesn't view launching his own comic book as a gamble.

"I don't think of it as a risk," May said. "It's certainly not as big of a deal as Ninja Turtles, but I'm having a lot of fun with it."

May, who was born and lives in Prince Albert, spent a significant portion of the last year writing Devil Dealers, which is illustrated by Ohio-based artist Brett Wood, before recently releasing it through a U.K. publisher, Markosia Enterprises.

"It's the story of a group of people who have a variety of different abilities: the world's greatest card shark, a chess master, a man who sold his soul to the devil to be the best blues musician. And they are coming together to fight the devil through contests using their unique abilities rather than punching the devil in the face."

May says he has been writing since he was a child and in more recent years has been published in magazines and on the web, in addition to writing for the Sheaf when he was a student at the University of Saskatchewan. Six years ago his work got the attention of Mirage comics.

"They were the original owners of Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles and I knew the characters pretty well, so I approached them and said, 'Here's some things that I can do,' and they liked it."

Opportunities to write for cartoons featuring Superman and the Ghostbusters soon followed. But he says writing for the comic book format will always be his favourite creative outlet.

"I like comics because you can get right to the heart of a story. You can establish things very quickly. You don't have to spend all this time establishing the back story and getting people to where they're suspending disbelief like in a movie or TV show."

May has been busy promoting Devil Dealers with appearances at McNally Robinson and a pair of stores during the recently held Free Comic Book Day, which he says has always been one of his favourite days of the year, as both a writer and a fan of the genre.

"It's always a lot of fun, I especially love all the children that come dressed up; they're getting exposed to comics. But it's also a lot of fun for their parents to see me and go, 'Oh, someone from Saskatchewan has worked on Ninja Turtles!' It surprises them."

Local talent

Ross May isn't the first person from Saskatchewan to have a significant impact on the world of comics. Saskatoon-based artist Tom Grummett has illustrated for both Marvel and DC, working on X-Men, Fantastic Four, The Amazing Spider-Man, Batman and Superman among many others.

Tabloid pays price for J.K. Rowling 'sob story' claim

J.K. Rowling GETTY IMAGES

A British tabloid has apologized and paid damages to Harry Potter author J.K. Rowling over an article about her time as a single mother.

Rowling brought a libel case against the Daily Mail after it alleged in an article in September that she told a false "sob story" on how people at her church stigmatized and taunted her for being a single mother on welfare. The newspaper report was based on an essay Rowling wrote for a charity describing her experiences some 20 years ago.

The paper printed an apology Wednesday stating that Rowling in fact did not make any false claims. The paper said it had agreed to pay "substantial damages" and legal costs to Rowling, who will donate the money to charity. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tips from the lips of an Angel

Model management. From hot-power yoga sessions to facial massages for breakouts, Lindsay Ellingson shares all her tricks

ROMINA MCGUINNESS
Metro World News

We've all had those moments: You want to get rid of bloat in a week's time for a big event or need to turn your complexion around in 24 hours for a big job interview. With a long list of big-time catwalks including Chanel, Chloé and Prada, and five years as a Victoria's Secret Angel under her belt, model Lindsay Ellingson has become a master at solving a beauty problem quickly. She reveals some of her tricks for looking fresh:

Start on the inside

"You can just tell when a girl looks sick or is too thin. I get light-headed and my energy fades. It's good to eat lots of clean, hearty meals so that you're not starving yourself — something like chicken, sweet potato and broccoli. I don't like putting food in my body that makes me feel toxic, so I always carry almonds in my purse. I'll eat a cheeseburger if I want one, but I'll just balance it out with a green juice. I eat less sugar, it just helps my skin glow and stops my energy levels from spiking."

Put the Starbucks runs on pause

"I love cold-pressed, iced black coffee but caffeine is dehydrating so I drink Kusmi Detox tea instead."

CONTRIBUTED

Add some heat to your yoga

"I've been doing hot power yoga four times a week and feel more toned than ever. It's not as hot as Bikram — I tried that once and almost passed out! Be in tune with your body and listen to it — if you're tired, it's OK to rest."

Hydrate well, inside and out, to fake a solid night's sleep

"I need about nine hours of sleep but I've learned to function with much less. I would fly overnight to Milan, arrive in the morning and go straight to 14 appointments — that's your job. So I started to sleep with an eye mask or take some melatonin (during flights). And drink lots of water. When you wake up dehydrated, your skin feels horrible. So I would put on the SKYN Iceland Hydra Cool Firming Eye Gels, roll an ice cube around my eye zone and spritz my face with the Heritage Store Rose Petals Rosewater — it helps me look awake"

When all else fails, copy the makeup artists

"I've definitely arrived super tired and broken out on the last day of the Paris shows. Thankfully the makeup artists are amazing when it comes to erasing signs of fatigue. They'll give a face massage using the Embryolisse Lait-Crème Concentré face cream to increase the blood flow to your face and use eye drops for extra sparkle. I also like to use Ling Drying Lotion on a pimple at night and it'll be gone by the time you wake up."

Chicken, Onions and Sumac with Pitta Bread. These bites are served as a street snack by tucking the ingredients into a pouch

1. Preheat the oven to 180 C (350 F)

2. Heat olive oil and butter in a heavy-based pan and stir in the onions. When they begin to soften, add garlic and fry until the onions turn golden brown.

3. Add the chicken and cook for 2–3 minutes, before stirring in most of the sumac, cardamom and baharat mix.

4. Add the lemon juice and cook gently until the chicken is tender but still juicy. Toss in most of the pine nuts and parsley and season to taste with salt and pepper.

5. Place the pita halves on the prepared baking sheet. Pop them in the preheated oven for about 10 minutes to toast them. Fill the toasted pouches with the chicken mixture, top each one with a dollop of yogurt and scatter the reserved sumac, pine nuts and parsley over the top. Serve immediately.

Cures to backyard woes

Yard acts to follow. A little lattice, some water and a raised bed are simply remedies for the backyard blues

Even a small fountain or waterfall can turn a noisy yard into a Zen garden. ISTOCK

Backyard trends may come and go but some yard headaches will never go away. While there will always be tasks like grass cutting that have to be done, there are common backyard problems that can be solved once and for all. Tackling any of these three dilemmas will be a vital step towards achieving backyard perfection.

Problem: AC unit sticks out like a sore thumb

Solution: That AC unit isn't going anywhere, so the best solution is to camouflage it as best as possible. A simple lattice screen around the unsightly box will do wonders to eliminate the eyesore, and you can even plant some growing vines at the base to further hide the unit. Make sure to leave room around it for proper airflow and to trim any plants regularly to keep your AC working all summer long.

Problem: City and car noise ruins the backyard Zen factor

Solution: Ponds and fountains are more than just eye candy. They provide a soothing sound that is not only relaxing but will help drown out traffic noise or other city racket. Don't focus too much on the fountain's size, but where it will be placed. Even a small waterfall can be effective if it's placed close to a popular seating area. Depending on the setup and location, it may be necessary to have an electrician install an outdoor outlet for the pump.

Problem: Kids and pets are trampling the garden

Solution: Allowing kids and pets to enjoy the yard shouldn't mean the destruction of a manicured garden or luscious vegetable patch. To keep your hard work from being damaged by an exercising dog or an errant soccer ball, create a raised flower bed a few feet off the ground. Whether using bricks or wood as the frame, this project can be completed on the weekend with no previous DIY experience, and it doesn't require any expensive tools.

Desperate Landscapes

For more advice on how to make your backyard the envy of the neighbourhood, tune in to Desperate Landscapes, Thursdays at 10 p.m. ET/PT on DIY Network Canada.

Mom deserves special thought

KATHY BUCKWORTH
For Metro

Mother's Day is supposed to be a day of celebration and gift giving — everything from handmade cards from the kids, to more expensive glittery items from grateful dads.

But some gifts can cause more stress and guilt than joy. Things like:

• The workout equipment/gym clothes/personal training sessions for the mom who hasn't had the chance or inclination to work out for a number of years. The reminder that she needs to get off the couch can be a harsh one. Suggest instead a bike ride or a family hike.

• A new blender/mixer/toaster oven or other small appliance for the mom who really doesn't want to spend any more time in the kitchen than she already does. This is going to make her feel bad about cluttering up the counter and not using the appliance.

• Gift cards are a terrific choice if mom likes to visit and shop at that particular place, but not if it is a hassle for her to get there with the kids. Think before choosing (giftofchoice.ca has a huge selection).

• A spa treatment sounds wonderful, but isn't for everyone. Not all women enjoy spa treatments to begin with, and those who do often can't indulge because they can't find a sitter for the kids or time in their schedule. Make sure the treatment is wanted, book the sitter, and get it in her schedule so she doesn't feel the gift card expiry guilt.

• Clothing can be tricky for those who aren't used to buying it for someone else. If you get a size too small you might be inferring she needs to lose weight; a size too big could mean you think she is bigger than she is. Check labels and sizes of favourite clothes before shopping.

Take extra time and think about what you are going to get your mom for Mother's Day. SHUTTERSTOCK

NHL playoffs. Rangers pushed to brink of elimination despite beating Fleury twice

Game 4

Penguins	Rangers

Brandon Sutter scored a short-handed goal to break a second-period tie, and the Pittsburgh Penguins moved within one win of the Eastern Conference finals with a 4-2 victory over the New York Rangers on Wednesday night.

Pittsburgh, which has won three straight following a series-opening loss, can advance with a Game 5 victory at home Friday night.

Evgeni Malkin scored at 2:31, and Jussi Jokinen made it 3-1 at 7:02 of the third before the teams traded late goals. Marc-Andre Fleury stopped 13 shots.

The only negative for the Penguins was that Fleury allowed a goal for the first time in three games. Carl Hagelin's tying tally in the second period was the Rangers' first goal in 145 minutes, 30 seconds of playing time.

Mats Zuccarello backhanded in a goal with 6:53 left to cut the Rangers' deficit to 3-2, on only their second shot of the third, but Chris Kunitz restored Pittsburgh's two-goal edge 57 seconds later. Henrik Lundqvist made 23 saves in the loss.

The weary Rangers played for the sixth time in nine nights, and not even a full day of rest on Tuesday or the return of forward Chris Kreider helped them. Kreider played for the first time since breaking his left hand a month ago.

Jokinen, who has an eight-game points streak, scored his insurance goal with a flip shot that struck the right leg of Rangers defenceman Marc Staal and bounded past Lundqvist.

Pittsburgh had regained the lead late in the second period by taking advantage of New York's inept power play. Not only did the Rangers fail to score for the 36th consecutive time on the power play, they fell behind for the second time.

Former Rider busted for pot possession: RCMP

Police have confirmed that former Saskatchewan Roughrider Kory Sheets was busted for pot possession several weeks ago and received an absolute discharge.

RCMP say the running back was pulled over outside the southern Saskatchewan community of Estevan for speeding.

An officer smelled marijuana and, when asked, Sheets produced two joints and some loose weed totalling 6.4 grams. The one-time CFL player pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana at a court appearance.

Sheets has made a $300 charitable donation to Students Against Drunk Driving as part of the discharge.

Sheets signed an NFL contract with the Oakland Raiders this year.

Police say Sheets also received a 24-hour roadside suspension after showing signs of impaired driving when he was pulled over, but there were no charges.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
It's good that you know how to be assertive but the planets warn you must not go too far. If you break the rules over the next 24 hours, someone higher up the ladder than you will make you pay for it.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You have nothing to worry about but for some reason you have this feeling of impending disaster. Most likely it is just your mind playing tricks on you — and even if it isn't, what happens will be no big deal.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Whatever else you do over the next 24 hours don't cut corners, because you won't get away with it. Resist the temptation to do anything dishonest, because you really don't need to.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
The Sun in your opposite sign of Taurus means, among other things, that you have to put up with people who annoy you. Don't be tempted to argue with them because if you do, the situation may get out of hand.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Don't think badly of yourself if you have to admit that you have failed to reach a target. The fact is you tried and that alone makes you a hero.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Most things seem to be going well for you and that's good, but the planets warn you must not get too content and drift along without trying. When things are going good, you should be aiming for great.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Don't worry if you lose out over the next 24 hours because you will more than make up for it later in the month. If something seems to be slipping from your grasp let it go.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Steer clear of disputes that have nothing to do with you. The more others try to draw you into an argument, the more you must keep your distance. That applies especially to friendships and money – they don't mix. SALLY BROMPTON
